He wasn't an ethnonationalist either because he didn't believe in unifying all members of an ethnic group into a single state. But this whole thing is like asking if Aquinas believed in the neoclassical economic synthesis. There were no nationalists of either variety in his time.

Aquinas didn't believe that you should show up, take an oath of citizenship, and become an equal citizen (which is the essence of modern civic nationalism). He didn't care about phenotype, but neither do modern Polish/Russian/Ukrainian ethnonationalists (same phenotype).

People lie to cops for lots of reasons. Sometimes their lies are just memory mistakes, sometimes b/c they are trying to cover up an embarrassing non-crime (e.g., Clinton lying about his adultery), sometimes b/c they are trying to cover up a crime unrelated to the investigation.

it's all coming together

Mark Zuckerberg · 17m · 100+ · 100+
I've spent a lot of time over the past year meeting with news organizations to talk about how we can work better together. As more people get more of their news from places like Facebook, we have a responsibility to create an informed community and help build common understanding.
We can't do that without journalists, but we also know that new technologies can make it harder for publishers to fund the journalism we all rely on. To be a better partner to the news industry, we started the Facebook Journalism Project. Our goal is to work more closely with newsrooms to develop products like Instant Articles and tools for journalists to report their stories. We're also working with publishers, researchers and universities to help people become more informed about the news they read online.
As part of this, we're going to test new ways to help news organizations grow their subscriptions. If people subscribe after seeing news stories on Facebook, the money will go directly to publishers who work hard to uncover the truth, and Facebook won't take a cut. We plan to start with a small group of U.S. and European publishers later this year and we'll listen to their feedback.
We're also making an update this week to help more people see where the news they read on Facebook comes from. Now when people search for an article or see one that's trending, they'll also see publisher logos next to the article. This update came from conversations we had with news publishers around the world. Eventually, our goal is to put a publisher's logo next to every news article on Facebook so everyone can understand more about what they're reading.
Giving people a voice is not enough without having organizations dedicated to uncovering new information and analyzing it. We're going to keep experimenting with different ways to support the news industry and make sure reporters and publishers everywhere can keep doing their important work.

Poking around Google Books a bit to see what Confederate monument-builders said they were trying to say. St. Louis, 1915:

The principal inscription for the monument was written by Dr. R. C. Cave, noted lecturer and writer of St. Louis, and is as follows: "To the memory of the soldiers and sailors of the Southern Confederacy, who fought to uphold the right declared by the pen of Jefferson and achieved by the sword of Washington. With sublime self-sacrifice they battled to preserve the independence of the States which was won from Great Britain and to perpetuate the constitutional government which was established by the fathers. Actuated by the purest patriotism, they performed deeds of prowess such as thrill the heart of mankind with admiration. 'Full in the front yeah, if you look at most measures of fear vs. greed, we are definitely in fear mode way out of proportion to anything going on.

The only reason to defend this as a "system of aristocracy" is romanticism about the Spanish Empire that you wouldn't extend to anyone else.

Blacks were imported, not conquered, and had inferior rights to both Indians, mestizos, whites.

And how did it encourage them? By giving them a status of legal superiority over Indians, mestizos, blacks, etc.

It was a superaddition to the existing Spanish system of aristocracy & one that was explicitly based on a racial hierarchy w/ whites at top.
